This volume is composed of a series of invited chapters from authors who are central and prolific contributors to the areas of group and team-based research. As such, each chapter provides an excellent overview of the current state of the research and a perspective on where scholars should be focusing their future research.

Neale (Stanford U.) and Mannix (Cornell U.) present the proceedings of the 15th annual conference on 'Research on Managing Groups and Teams,' the last in the series. As the final volume to come out of these conferences, this collection of 14 papers eschews a narrow theme and instead opts for a broad approach that collectively provides a broad review of the field as a whole. Topics addressed include studying dynamics within groups, theories of group leadership, status hierarchies in teams, the nature of collective reactions to potential transgressions, managing conflict in groups and teams, political correctness and group composition, the effects of group diversity, group learning research, technology and teams, time pressure and productivity, and interaction dynamics in multicultural teams.
